Lenny: Hey, Joey, look at that bird
over there.

Joey: Yeah, Lenny, what's that she got on?

L: Looks like hot pants from the Lyons Shop.

J: You mean that chic place
in . . . in . . .
what's it in, Lenny?

L: Lewisburg!

J: Yeah, Lewisburg.

L: The birds there buy some great skirts too. You know, with the halters and things.

J: Yeah.

L: You remember those birds
in the park last week?

J: What Park?

L: You remember! They had those low cut sweaters —

J: Yeah. . . You mean they came from—

L: Right. The IN place for clothes in Lewisburg.

DIRECTOR'S NOTES

One day an old man, weary of life, slowly trudges up the attic stairs of an aging Victorian mansion, cautiously opening a creaking door. The layers of dust caused him to choke; he coughs and rubs his wet eyes. In the far corner, under a crack in the ceiling through which a slender beam of light infiltrates, a wooden chest catches his eye. He pulls his crippled body to it, opens it, and pushes aside the cobwebs. Piece by piece he removes items which evoke dark and distant memories—and finally a portrait! The frame is thick with dust and the paint peeling. Yet her eyes glare, deep into his, penetrating his heart, his very soul. All is silent, but a silence so deafening, so overwhelming that he is forced to thrust his hands over his ears and scream, "Speak! Speak!" But there is no one to listen. No one to hear. All quiet on the Western Front.
