ABOUT THE PLAY

The play is set in the spring, summer, and fall and skips freely from summer back to spring or forward to fall from one conversation to another. Sometimes scenes are stopped and later repeated and carried to their conclusion. This collage technique enables the thematic and narrative elements of the plot to climax simultaneously by presenting the story line out of chronological order. Mr. Wilson won praise for his technique and a coveted Drama Desk Vernon Rice Award for THE RIMERS OF ELDRITCH as best play of 1967.
